Original publisher: Colorado Springs, Colo. : USAF Institute for National Security Studies, US Air Force Academy, 1997. OCLC Number: (OCoLC)44723117 Subject: Tactical nuclear weapons -- Russia (Federation) Excerpt: . . . toward the global abolition of nuclear weapons. In a surprising turn of events, General Butler expressed his apparently new-found belief that nuclear weapons have no defensible role. . . and that broader consequences of their employment 1 transcend any military utility. The following day, a group of 61 retired generals and admirals from 17 countries joined in issuing a statement calling for: significant cuts in current nuclear stockpiles by all nations that currently possess nuclear weapons; the removal of nuclear weapons from alert postures and substantial reductions in their readiness; a long-term international policy based on the principle of continuous, complete and irrevocable elimination of 2 nuclear weapons. Among this groups recommendations was a call for the United States and Russia to continue the START process, and, as soon as practicable, to cut down to 1000 3 In the judgment of these former to 1500 warheads each and possibly lower. military officers, such a move could be taken quickly and without any reduction in the military security of either the US or Russia. While the motives of this group may be admirable, the notion that the two largest possessors of nuclear weapons could speedily draw down their arsenals to under 2000 warheads is misguided. Such an idea highlights a bias toward the apex of the nuclear weapons pyramid - the strategic nuclear forces - and ignores the thousands of so-called tactical nuclear weapons possessed by both states. The very real threats associated with Russias tactical nuclear arsenal - possible operational use, loss of central control,...
