The chief events of the centennial year have been, so far, the disclosures of corruption. So wide and so high has it reached, that it is become a national disease. Americans, abroad and at home, have been ashamed of their countrymen: it has required faith for them not to be ashamed of their country. Europe asks if this, then, is what comes of liberty. I jet us answer, No--this is what comes of being false to liberty. In so far as America has doubted and departed from those principles of liberty and democracy which are the rock ou which this nation is founded, so far she has been brought into danger and disgrace. Our fathers made one terrible mistake. Aroused by unjust taxation, they proclaimed liberty and declared independence. But they left negro slavery, and they tolerated that protectionist doctrine which is itself a denial of the possibility of independence and an impeachment of the life-principle of our nation. They could not foresee, as we sorrowfully know, the awful results of this compromise with absolute principle. This compromise has been our curse. It involved fratricidal war; it held the seeds of the corruption which has followed the war. It has brought us under bondage to our worst, --a bondage which is of all slavery the most tyrannous and the most dangerous. The war was a trinnph of liberty, and a blow to if. Having freed four millions of blacks, we forgot, in the...
