Trouble has been brought upon Alice through love-- and Ellen fears the same result from the same cause. Alice, by her faith, when she makes the sign of the cross above the miserable dwarf, turns her grief into joy. Allan wishes Ellen to have just such faith, and to believe that good begets good. The message of the poem is hope. Many other points about the song could be studied, but hardly before the high school. The Coronach, Blanche of Devons warning, and the Battle of Beal an Duine, will yield just as much as one wishes to get from them, especially the last-named song. An entire paper could be written on how to teach and study this poem alone, a master-piece within a master-piece. As to the characters in the poem--do they live Ask a boy who is his favorite character and why. He will say, perhaps, I like James--hes so brave. He wasnt afraid of Roderick and his men on the mountainside, but said: Come one, come all, this rock shall fly From its firm base as soon as I. What does the boy like The human, the heroic. So on through all the characters--the vital point is reached when each one touches upon the chord that responds to the natural within us. Older people may study life from life. Let the little folks study from books; the fairy tale, with its mystic and ethereal surroundings; the book of...
