General Accounting Office, 2001 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)54905332 Excerpt: . . . During the entire review of Customs, OMSOE sampled 54 (or about 3 percent) of approximately 2, 061 appointments, including 15 Schedule A appointments, made during 1999. The Assistant Director said that because of the limited sample, any conclusions developed from the analysis of appointments sampled could not be projected as being representative of all the appointments for the organization as a whole. The Assistant Director believes the judgmental sampling technique is adequate because OMSOE is looking for systemic problems. OPMs oversight of appointment authorities also includes occasional surveys by OPMs Employment Service. These surveys are not conducted regularly and, in the case of Customs, were conducted most recently in 1982 and 1998. The surveys primarily consisted of OPMs requesting that Treasury justify the continuing need for each of its appointment authorities. Treasurys response to OPMs survey in July 1998 addressed the continuing need for Customs single-agency authority for criminal investigators. The response did not apply to the 10 positions because the authority for those positions...
