As we move into the 21st Century our world is faced with enormous challenges and opportunities. Never before have we experienced such growth in financial, intellectual, and human capital. The number of billionaires and millionaires is growing on a daily basis. The growth and innovation in the technology sector has been a catalyst for the unprecedented growth potential and caused this burgeoning prosperity to take on global proportions. As the saying goes, knowledge is power, and advancements in technology are enabling organizations and individuals across the globe to share that knowledge with the world in a matter of minutes. In his insightful work, The World is Flat, Thomas Friedman states; Individuals from every corner of the flat world are being empowered. Globalization makes it possible for so many people to plug and play, and you are going to see every color of the human rainbow take part. Let there be no doubt, many organizations and individuals appear to have made it to an economic promised land. But such is not the case for the vast majority of organizations and individuals. Despite this enormous prosperity and growth, there are companies, schools, churches, non-profits, governments, and other institutions that are just barely making it. Hurricane Katrina exposed many of these individuals to the world. The focus of these individuals and organizations is not on thriving in the 21st Century but surviving in a change-oriented, fast-paced world of outsourcing, internets, emails and short attention spans. It s not hard to detect these organizations. You can see it in the incoherent focus of their leaders. You can hear it and see it in the...
