It may be observed, that many explosions have occurred on Monday mornings after the boilers had been recently cleaned out, an operation which is frequently performed on the Sunday evenings; and from the necessary haste in such cases, a careless engineer will only imperfectly refill the boiler with water. To the above ten requisites it is almost necessary to add, that should there be other boilers working in connexion with the one that has burst, it may be useful to have a somewhat similar description of them as of the one in question, A few particulars may also be required with respect to the engine itself. 1. The size or power of the engine--that is, its reputed horse-power. Where this is not easily obtained, it may be very readily estimated by allowing 25 circular inches, area of the cylinder for each horse-power, that is, divide the...
