Blest by her beauteous girl no more she ll be. No more the coming of her feet she hears, Nor marks the time, expecting Emalie. Woe for the sister, and the brothers, who Will listen to her dulcet voice no more! Woe for us all! We ne er again shall view The angel of the household ope the door! Come, let us tune a melancholy strain, And follow, with slow feet, dark-mantled Woe. Come, join the mournful breezes of the plain, And, all along the valley, weeping go. Thied Part. 0 for a lyre to wake our Love once more! With her dear life anew how blest we d be; More blest than with the world s full golden store, Richer than with the jewels of the sea! Let s strew these flowers on the snowy bed, And lay fresh roses on her angel brow; And from them sweetest perfume will be shed, To mingle with our tears of sorrow now. Before ye take her from our eyes for e er, Oh, let us kiss again this forehead sweet. Oh, let us kiss again these fingers fair, Oh, let us kiss again these lovely feet. On yonder holy hill shall be her rest, There o er her fall the beams of rosy day, Whence may eternal spirits of the hlest Behold the eve in beauty fade away. And he who singeth of the fairy Wye Shall often to the sacred spot repair;...
