A camera from a dead man. That s what Robert Sterling, a once renowned photojournalist, had to guide him; to help him redeem and resurrect his life from two years lost in a drunken downward spiral. Was the young girl he could only see through the camera a ghost haunting him from a dead past or was she leading him towards a new future? Did she exist or was he going crazy just as his mother had forty years ago? To find out, he had to go back to the small town he d left nearly four decades years ago. a place he d forgotten full of memories he d buried. To where, when he was 18 years old, someone had tried to kill him for what he d done. To where he found and lost his first love. Union Station: She lived two lives. And faced one killer. Five days a week Elizabeth Holloway crossed the Great Hall through its morning setting of dark-to-light-to-dark again. Its vaulted skylight, above the enormous wooden benches, illumined some people and cast others in shadow. She wondered about those she saw in the same seat every day. Did those who sat in darkness have things to hide--as she did? She led two lives; one in the light, one in the dark. They started and ended at Union Station. It was 1943. dark times with a world at war. it was the kind of murder police didn t put more than a token effort into investigating. When a friend is killed and Beth finds she s next on the killer s...
